

Events and everyday offers, for approval

This replaces the offer sheet I sent on 17 September. Your till report arrived, I read it, and it talked me out of most of what was on that page. Here is the rebuilt version. Nothing goes anywhere until you have put prices on it.

FOR APPROVAL · 21 SEPTEMBER 2026

WHY THIS VERSION IS DIFFERENT

The first sheet was built on guesswork. This one isn't.

I gave every day of the week a discount because I had no idea which hours were actually quiet. Now I do. Four numbers from your own till did most of the arguing.

46%

of restaurant revenue comes from Saturdays alone

R38,547

taken on the house music Saturday. A normal one takes about R10,750

R2,160

all the trade after 16:00 on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, across eleven weeks

R1,190

all the red wine you sold in eleven weeks. About fifteen rand a day

One night in September earned more than three ordinary midweek days put together. That is the whole argument for this page.

Your brand foundation makes the same case from the other direction. It says promotions should pull people in through the quality of the experience, and that Acreage must never be known for cheap drinks. Reading it back, my first sheet was drifting exactly there. So nothing here is a discount. Every line is either an occasion worth booking or something you don't currently sell.

PART ONE

Four events, on a rhythm people can learn

Each one sits on a different day and a different part of that day, so they never compete with each other. Three of them aim at hours where you currently take almost nothing.

WHEN	THE EVENT	WE SUGGEST	YOUR PRICE	RUN IT?
Estate Wednesdays Last Wed, 17:30	A wine estate, six wines, fourteen seats. A different producer each month, someone from the farm pouring and talking, snacks from the kitchen. Booked and paid in advance. Fourteen seats is small enough to sell out, and a sold-out evening is the best thing you can put on Instagram. It also builds the wine list one estate at a time instead of all at once.	R225 per person	-----	Yes / No
Sundowners at the Track Last Fri, 17:00	Live acoustic on the lawn as the light goes. No charge to come. What we sell is a	Free entry Board to share R345	-----	Yes / No board to share, MCC and wine by the glass, and the chairs facing the track. Friday evenings currently take about R320 across the whole night. There is nothing here to protect, which makes it the safest place on the week to try something.

The Long Table One Sunday a month, 12:30	One long table under the trees. Three courses brought to the middle for everyone to pass around, a glass on arrival, and nobody hurrying you out. Sunday tables already spend more than any other day of the week. This is the clearest version of lingering you can actually put a price on.	R425 per person	-----	Yes / No

WHEN	THE EVENT	WE SUGGEST	YOUR PRICE	RUN IT?
House at The Acreage Every second month	September, again, on a schedule. Ticketed, capped, announced six weeks out. Same format, nothing clever added. This is the only line on the page that isn't a prediction. It happened, and it took R38,547 in a day. I have it every second month rather than quarterly, and I would rather argue for that than against it.	Confirm what did you charge, and how many came?	-----	Yes / No
They only work if they go in the diary together. Six months of dates, announced at once, three weeks of notice each. An event people hear about three weeks out fills up. One they hear about on the Thursday does not, and a half empty evening does more damage to the brand than no evening at all.

PART TWO

Three things to put on the menu

Not offers, and nothing to run. These are gaps in what you sell, and each one is money walking past a table you already have.

ADD	WHY	WE SUGGEST	YOUR PRICE	DO IT?
A dessert menu Six of them	You sold 821 cappuccinos and 29 desserts. The entire dessert menu is a cake slice and a brownie. Coffee is the single biggest seller in the business and almost nothing is leaving the kitchen alongside it. Six desserts, written up properly, offered at the table.	R75 to R95 each	-----	Yes / No
Wine by the glass Three or four estates	Almost every wine you list comes from one farm. Red wine took R1,190 in eleven weeks. One glass of Krone Borealis sold in that whole time, and one of Night Nectar. Your brand plan wants wine culture, tastings and estate partnerships, and none of that is sellable off the list as it stands.	R55 to R95 a glass, plus MCC by the glass	-----	Yes / No
The board to share Cheese and charcuterie	The thing that keeps a table there another hour. Your own brand document describes it almost exactly: chairs looking over the track, with wine, olives and a cheese board between them. It is the best lingering product you could sell and it is not on the menu.	R285 for two to share	-----	Yes / No

Two quiet windows worth naming

Only two. Both point at hours that are genuinely empty, and neither is priced below what the parts cost.

WHEN	THE OFFER	WE SUGGEST	YOUR PRICE	RUN IT?
The Monday Offsite Closed to the public	A company of ten to thirty, with the place to themselves. Breakfast, a working lunch, coffee all day and the space for the morning. Sold quietly to companies, never posted. Monday earns almost nothing because you are closed, so anything booked here is new money. Venues near you quote around R575 a head for the same half day.	R450 per head, half day	-----	Yes / No
Breakfast on the Lawn Sundays, 8:00 to 10:30	Low tables and blankets on the grass. Breakfast and as much filter coffee as people want, before the lunch crowd arrives and the terrace fills. Sunday mornings are quiet while Sunday lunch is full. The demand is already coming to the property, just two hours later.	R145	-----	Yes / No

THINGS I GOT WRONG LAST TIME

Three offers from the first sheet are gone.

Tuesday breakfast

I had a discounted Farmhouse Breakfast on Tuesday morning. Your figures show Tuesday between 8:00 and 10:00 is one of your better midweek windows already. I would have been handing money back on tables you were getting anyway.

Removed.

Coffee and cake on Wednesday

Wednesday afternoon is quiet, that part was right. But nobody drives to Midrand for a discounted slice of cake. The tasting now sits on Wednesday instead, because that is worth the drive.

Replaced.

Thursday ribs and a draught

Thursday night is empty. So is every midweek night, and there is no sign yet that anyone wants to be out here on a Thursday. Build Friday first. If Sundowners works, Thursday is the next conversation.

Held, not cancelled.

And one naming correction

I had a Champagne brunch on the first version. You don't stock Champagne, you stock MCC, and in South Africa those are not interchangeable words. Anything we run has to say Cap Classique or MCC unless you are actually pouring French.

Worth checking across your menus too.

WHAT IT COULD BE WORTH

Somewhere around R110,000 over ninety days.

I want to be straight about this figure, because the last sheet carried a bigger one and I don't stand behind it any more. I had no baseline then. Now I have eleven weeks of your trading.

- The events carry about R77,000 of it. That assumes the three new ones draw roughly half what your house music night drew, which is deliberately pessimistic, plus one repeat of that night at what it actually took.
- Monday and Sunday morning add about R43,000, and most of that is Monday, for the simple reason that a closed day earns nothing at all right now.
- I have knocked ten percent off the total because the first run of anything underperforms the fourth. People need to hear about something two or three times before they come.
- The menu additions are not in the number. Dessert, wine and the board raise what an existing table spends. I would rather show you real figures after a month than invent them today.

The only number on this page that isn't an estimate is R38,547. That one already happened. Everything else is my best reading of your figures, and you should treat it that way.

OVER TO YOU

What I need back

- ☐ A price, or a yes or no, on each line. Where my price is wrong, write yours over it. You know what these plates cost far better than I do.
- ☐ The ticket price for the house music night and roughly how many came, so the next one is planned off a real number instead of my arithmetic.
- ☐ A decision on the wine list. Three or four estates instead of one, and MCC by the glass. Nearly everything your brand plan wants to do with wine waits on this.
- ☐ Six dates for the next six months, checked against your function diary, so the whole calendar can go out in one go.
- ☐ A button on the till for each offer that goes live. Otherwise in three months we will be estimating all over again instead of reading what happened.

None of this goes near your social media until it comes back with your prices on it.
